Late April 2013

A couple of weeks ago I was lucky enough to work at a College Fair for Wabash and I wanted to share a few things that I learned from it.

- 1) Gregg Popovich was recruited to play basketball at Wabash! An Army officer came up to me who was recruiting for West Point, introduced himself, and play basketball, and that Gregg Popovich was in the same boat with the Air Force Academy.

- 2) honest I was surprised by this. Generally my experiences at these things include a pack of girls, or boyfriends/girlfriends coming up to me and as soon as I mentioned. It made me think back to my feelings about Wabash when I first got a recruiting letter and thought how many of us as juniors in high school who were not legacies really wanted to keeps his passion for Wabash and makes an impact in his time there and after he graduates.
- 3) me for the faux leather jacket I was sporting with the collar up and the L.A. Looks on my first visit to campus in 2001, but have you guys seen what high school kids wear these days?! If you had jackets were wearing.

I get that skinny jeans are in and that a combi worn on the top of their head inside?

In addition to my observations from the College Fair, I wanted to share an example of the Wabash network at work. Last month I was informed that my office will be closing at realized the network we have to work with (pecial shout-out to Matt Ripley who was kind enough to refer me for a position at Epic!). Eric told Jake to have me give him a call if I wanted so I reached out and explained to him my situation. For the next hour Eric coached me on my LinkedIn profile and then browsed through his contacts in the financial services industry and then sent an email to them that included my and we set up a night to grab some conversational beverages. This was great as the job rough the interview process which has a lot of interactions with business and commercial bankers. Allen was able to give me a few tips on how to network with bankers and the types of things I should look to do for them. The next day Allen followed up with me by giving me the contact information of Colin email and request for interview tips in about 30 minutes and then followed that up with a call where he was able to give me some specific topics to bring up in my interview that would help me stand out.

My final interview was yesterday and I feel pretty good about it, but I feel even better about the support group that I d
